General Information

Overview

This unit provides an introduction to modern building construction technology with an emphasis on multi-unit and low-rise construction. In this unit, you will briefly touch upon the legislative requirements applicable to modern building construction. You will discover how key functions and performance requirements are linked to material selection, structural design, and construction methods. You will learn about advancements in materials technology and construction methods, how they are interlinked and all come together to influence the construction of buildings. The unit relates and outlines procedures, principles, and methods of modern construction of residential and commercial projects including multi-story buildings as designated by the National Construction Code for building classes 1 to 10.

Previous Student Feedback

Feedback, Recommendations and Responses

Every unit is reviewed for enhancement each year. At the most recent review, the following staff and student feedback items were identified and recommendations were made.

Feedback from SUTE

Feedback

Link content to real-world application.

Recommendation

Videos on construction processes were included in the workshop slides. It is recommended that some site visits be included for a better understanding of Australian construction practices.

Feedback from UC reflection

Feedback

Classroom arrangement for the online quiz.

Recommendation

The A3 is an online quiz, and students can take it from any location. Nevertheless, some students could not locate a suitable venue to complete the quiz. Consequently, it is advisable to utilise a classroom to ensure that all students may be seated in a single location to complete the quiz without complications.
