General Information

Overview

Celebrities exist because of their high media profiles. From the cut of a dress worn on the red carpet, to an irate social media post made in a fit of anger, publicity can make or break an individual's reputation. Dealing with intense personal media scrutiny requires specialist public relations knowledge. You will explore the elements required to develop the profile of individuals, and how strategic communication techniques can be used to monitor, boost or influence reputation. You will move beyond familiar definitions of celebrity (evident in influencers, politicians, business leaders or sports stars) to consider the notion of celebrity as it impacts contemporary culture. Celebrity PR is a useful skill to develop and enhance your own professional profile, or to address issues involving the publicity of individuals. You will build on public relations skills you may have previously applied to organisations and shifts the focus to personal image and status. This unit is relevant for anyone who may pursue a career in the public eye. You will learn skills of reputation management and identity formation - either for yourself or on behalf of someone else.
