General Information

Overview

In this unit, you will discuss the aetiology of lifestyle-related diseases with a focus on physical activity and exercise as a prevention and treatment strategy. You will gain a basic understanding of the physiological effects of physical activity and exercise, and be able to identify interventions to improve physical activity and reduce sedentary behaviour at the individual, community, and population level. You will gain fundamental knowledge and skills associated with measurement of physical activity, health and exercise, and apply this knowledge for the purpose of health-related research/study and exercise prescription.

Previous Student Feedback

Feedback, Recommendations and Responses

Every unit is reviewed for enhancement each year. At the most recent review, the following staff and student feedback items were identified and recommendations were made.

Feedback from ESSA external accreditation review panel

Feedback

Recommended to replace online quizzes to in-class test for accreditation purposes.

Recommendation

It is recommended that the three online quizzes be removed and replaced with an in-class test that will be completed during the mandatory residential school.

Feedback from SUTE Unit Comments

Feedback

Students recommended releasing content within Tiles from the start of the Term rather than rolling it out each week.

Recommendation

It is recommended that the content of PPT slides within each tile be released from the start of the term, with lectures to continue being delivered weekly.

Feedback from Unit Coordinator and ESSA external accreditation review panel

Recommended to review assessment items and percentage weighting of assessments.

Recommendation

It is recommended that the Unit Coordinator review and complete a unit update proposal.
