General Information

Overview

In this unit you will examine the principles and scope of practice of a clinical exercise physiologist within an inter-professional environment. The contemporary challenges of the Australian healthcare sector will also be explored. This unit will focus on legislation, regulations, and professional and behavioural standards, as well as ethical, cultural, and legal responsibilities as they apply to the clinical exercise physiology profession. You will also explore the application of behaviour change theories to support engagement. Finally, you will develop advanced communication skills for fostering effective collaborative and respectful interactions with clients and other health professionals.
