General Information

Overview

This unit offers a discrete exploration of culturally safe midwifery practice with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander families, focusing on the historical, social, cultural, and political factors that impact their health and wellbeing. You will critically engage with Indigenous knowledge systems, social determinants of health, and holistic approaches to perinatal care. You will investigate contemporary models of midwifery across diverse settings and design evidence-based, culturally safe strategies to address identified gaps in care. The unit places emphasis on developing your leadership, advocacy, ethical responsibility, and collaboration skills necessary for culturally safe and equitable midwifery practice.
