General Information

Overview

The effective delivery of an instrumental music curriculum is contingent on the knowledge and ability of the teacher in two associated areas: multi-instrument instruction and conducting technique. Through beginner-intermediate studies of multi-instrument and conducting techniques, you will have the opportunity to develop the pedagogical skills and concepts required to deliver successful group instrumental music instruction and ensemble direction for beginner-intermediate students. Non-percussion majors must study percussion and drummers/percussionists must study an instrument from the woodwind or brass families. You will be required to develop skills on an unfamiliar instrument, performing repertoire and exercises on this instrument relative to the beginner-intermediate level. Additionally, you will continue to develop ensemble directing skills and conducting techniques for beginner-intermediate ensembles. In undertaking this unit, you will be required to have access to the instruments chosen for your study.
