General Information

Overview

This unit is designed to develop and consolidate your practice in community and public health nutrition applying your knowledge at the local and population level. You will develop a range of strategies to influence change and reduce the burden of chronic disease. You will explore the efficacy of current interventions and strategies that are used to address nutrition-related issues. You will then translate and apply community and public health concepts into the development and management of nutrition intervention/promotion projects for an at-risk group in a regional/rural/remote community as a part of your full-time supervised placement (30 days). This experience will develop your research, problem-solving, business management and professional skills as you will work through the stages of project planning, implementation, and evaluation and then synthesise your findings into a final report. You will work in collaboration with key partners throughout the placement.
