Previous Student Feedback

Feedback, Recommendations and Responses

Every unit is reviewed for enhancement each year. At the most recent review, the following staff and student feedback items were identified and recommendations were made.

Feedback from Student evaluation

Feedback

More teaching on how to use telehealth. More opportunity to practice skills in the fourth year would be helpful.

Recommendation

Bachelor of Social Work (BSW) students identified a need for more teaching and practice opportunities in telehealth. In response, additional lectures, resources, and practice-based activities were incorporated into the unit, including expanded skills development opportunities within the residential school.

Feedback

Really appreciate Shirley Ledger's teaching style and her presentation of content, levels of support and the structure of the assessments. Fantastic unit.

Recommendation

Student feedback highlights strong satisfaction with the teaching approach, structure of the unit, and level of support provided. The presentation of content and clarity of assessment design were identified as key strengths contributing to student learning. In response, these approaches will be maintained and further embedded within the unit. This includes continuing to deliver structured, clearly scaffolded assessments, high levels of academic support, and engaging teaching strategies that support student confidence and skill development. Ongoing reflection will ensure these strengths are sustained while also identifying opportunities to enhance consistency across the teaching team.

Feedback

Video recording of feedback is beyond valuable and something that I'm going to keep for the duration of my degree and most likely as I enter into the social work field full time.

Recommendation

It is recommended that the use of audio-visual feedback be continued and further embedded within the unit as a core assessment practice. This approach provides personalised, detailed, and practice-relevant feedback that supports student learning, skill development, and readiness for professional practice. It also enables students to revisit feedback over time, enhancing its ongoing value beyond the unit. Consideration should be given to expanding this approach across other units where appropriate, to support consistency in feedback quality and student experience across the course.

Feedback

Some of the video resources were old.

Recommendation

It is recommended that the University prioritise investment in contemporary, discipline-specific multimedia resources to support teaching and learning within the unit. Current video resources available through the Library are limited, dated, and predominantly based on international (particularly United States) practice contexts, which reduces their relevance to Australian social work practice and contemporary service delivery environments. There is a need to source or develop high-quality, current resources that reflect local practice frameworks, diverse client contexts, and emerging modes of practice such as telehealth. This may include targeted acquisition of updated materials, collaboration with professional bodies, or development of internally produced resources. Addressing this gap will enhance the authenticity and applicability of learning materials, better preparing students for professional practice and aligning teaching resources with current sector expectations.
